cut, but the addition of yeast produces the loaf as we know it. This is explained by the fact that when yeast is employed carbonic acid gas is produced, which gives rise to the spongi-ness essential in the structure of good bread. And the fact that the action of the yeast also produces alcohol has led to the story of how a baker, learning this fact, condensed the vapors from his oven until he had obtained a small bottle of spirit, which he tri-necessary to devise a counterblast. and put up a notice stating that his

Have you ever heard of the medi-

Long before the virtues of antiphloextolled as healing and antiseptic agenta, shoemakers' wax was relied upon in many an old-fashioned home.

Treatment of Acute Pneumonia. The open-air treatment of acute pneumonia is warmly advocated by physicians, who have had much expe-rience with this disease. Persons suf-the imperfect aeration of the blood demands it. That there are fewer bac-terin in the out-of-door air is another indication for the open-air treatment.

Air in abundance, in motion, especially in the open, is an essential to the maintenance of health and a powerful aid in restoring health where it has been impaired. The case of acute pneumonia should be kept in the open both by day and by night. The cold out-of-door air lessens the duration of the fever, the patient breathes with less distress; sleeps better, and rarely is a sedative needed. The tongue is cleaner, appetite is better and convalescence is rapid. It is well known that cold is one of the most efficient agencies for the cure of disease, and Pocket Shower Bath.

A Californian has invented a shower bath which a traveler can carry in his pocket. It is a nickel-plated brass tube with a cork, says the Indianapolis News. The tube is bent like a fishhook and one end inserted in the cork through a hole in the center, with a round plate to keep it from slipping.

The other end of the tube is flattened to make a narrow slit about half an inch long at the end. This slit causes the water to spray. The other end is fitted to sny faucet in a tafhtub or washbowl, and the force of the water causes a fine sid sufficient spray to spout that gives a refreshing shower bath. The opray is not great or strong, but it is enough to be the means of great refreshment to the tired traveler. The cork is inserted in the fau-cet and, of course, can be made to fit

New Touches in Finishing Summer Blouses

A group of three of the latest summer blouses pictured in the illustration given here, shows some of the new finishing touches by which manufacturers accomplish variety in making these waists. They are of pongee and crepe-de-chine. Machine hem-stitching and buttons are the features depended upon for decoration, and occasional little oddities in the cut of collar and cuffs or yoke and body give individuality to the design.

At the left a plain waist of pon-gee, also made in crepe, has seams set together with machine hemstitching. The long, plain sleeves are finished at the wrist with a hemstitched band instead of cuffs. Buttons are set on in groups and are often in red, green or black; the brightest of the green or red shades are used.

At the right a dainty waist of crepe-de-chine is embroidered at each side with a flower spray in the shoulder seams, an insertion of venetian lace is set in. Hemstitched plaits down the front elaborate the model further, and the sleeves are long. The high collar is finished with hemstitching also. Round pearl buttons finish this model, which is dressler in character than the others.

At the center a smart model is small, round buttons are of black jet. The odd collar and cuffs are cut with points; the collar having three that are hemstitched. Each point is fin-ished with one of the jet buttons. They are wired to support them, and turned back when the waist is worn. Buttons decorate also the pointed cuffs. All stitching in this model is done in black silk.

Cheap Dust Cans.

There is no excuse for getting the hair dusty, for dust caps can be bought in pretty prints in pink or violet and white for 12 cents each.

These are really pretty caps, with an elastic to keep them snug at the back, and a standing of ruchelike frill about the face. They are useful not only for sweeping and dusting, but for cooking.

They keep any possible dust from the hair safely out of the way and they also keep the odors of cooking from entering the hair-where they would cling tenaciously.

Unintentional Error Coupled Dr. D B. Johnson's Name With Patent Medicine Render.

Mediciae Reader.

Every person who has ever had anything to do about a newspaper shop knows that when erfors creen into the paper they somehat always manage to occur in a way that makes it appear in its worst possible light. Just why errors always occur in the wrong place, or the place where it makes the greatest amount of difference, is not to be explained. It is just that way, and that is all there is to it.

A reader of The Intelligencer was received a surprised yesterday to see the name of the esteemed president of Winthrop College used in connection with a patent medicine advertisement singing the praises of a certain compound for lams back.

It so happened that in the same issue of The Intelligencer there was an advertisement with reference to a Winthrop College scholarship examination. This article ended by stating that anyone desiring further information should address: "Pres. D. B. Johnson, Rock Hill."

This last line containing Dr. John-

This last line containing Dr. Johnson's name and address inadvertently got out of its proper place in some strange way and happened to find a place right at the beginning of the article addressing the cure for lame back.

The intelligencer, of course, regrets the error; and is quick to ask Dr. Johnson's parden for this unwarrant-ed and unintentioned use of his name in the advertisement in question.
